Synopsis:

The Marrow family is falling apart. Meredith, the once-bright and vibrant daughter, is withdrawn and secretive. Regan, the rebellious older sister, is struggling with addiction. The parents are desperate and at wit's end. Their last hope is an exorcism.

But what the Marrow family doesn't know is that the exorcism will only make matters worse.

When the priest arrives, he finds a house that is filled with darkness. There are strange noises coming from the walls, and the air is heavy with a sense of dread. The exorcism begins, and things quickly spiral out of control.

Meredith's body starts to convulse violently. She speaks in tongues and her eyes roll back in her head. Regan becomes increasingly aggressive, attacking the priest and her family. The parents watch in horror as their children are consumed by an evil force.

As the exorcism reaches its climax, the house is consumed by flames. The priest and the family escape, but they will never be the same.
